The Department of Communities, Child Safety and Disability Services has engaged The Queensland Centre for Domestic and Family Violence Research and consortium partners (see below) to review the current domestic and family violence practice standards for working with women and with perpetrators, and to develop a suite of evidence-based minimum standards and guides. The new standards will apply to all service types funded under the Domestic Violence funding area. This will include domestic and family violence services supporting local service systems, women's and children's services, counselling, court services, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander services and perpetrator interventions.

We are seeking the input of funded services and other agencies responding to domestic and family violence. If you are unable to attend your Regional Forum, you can still let us know your views about practice standards. Contact us on:
